PART TWO: READING COMPREHENSION

Directions: Read the text below. Then read the questions that follow it and choose the best answer to each question among A, B, C or D, marking your answers on your answer sheet.

When I arrived in England I thought I knew English. After I'd been here an hour I realized that I did not understand one word. In the first week I picked up a tolerable working knowledge of the language and the following dozen fortnights convinced me that I would never know it really well, let alone perfectly. My only consolation is that nobody speaks English perfectly.

If you live here long enough you will find out that you need just a single adjective, nice. You can say that the weather is nice, a restaurant is nice, you had a nice time, and all this will be very nice.

The most successful attempts, however, to look a man of high culture have been made on the usage of polysyllabic words. Many foreigners who have learnt Latin and Greek discover that the English language has absorbed a huge amount of ancient Latin and Greek expressions, and they realize that (a) it is much easier to learn these expressions than the much simpler English words; (b) that these exceptionally long words make a simply superb impression when talking to the greengrocer, the porter and the insurance agent.

But even in Curzon Street society, if you say, for instance, that you are a tough guy they will consider you a vulgar, irritating and objectionable person. Should you declare, however, that you are an inquisitorial homo sapiens, they will have no idea what you mean, but they will feel in their bones that you must be something wonderful. When you know all the long words, it is advisable to start learning some of the short ones, too.

16. Within an hour after his arrival in England the narrator found out

- A) he knew English very well.
- B) he spoke English properly.
- C) he didn't understand only one word.
- D) he could understand nothing.

17. In the first week the narrator

- A) learned enough English to start work.
- B) learned enough English to get by.
- C) realized he would never learn English.
- D) realized the English didn't speak properly.

18. To people who have learned Latin and Greek, the English language seems

- A) very easy to master perfectly.
- B) full of polysyllabic, difficult-to-remember words.
- C) quite close in vocabulary to the two ancient languages.
- D) an easy, simplified version of the ancient languages.

19. People commonly use polysyllabic words

- A) to show they know Latin and Greek.
- B) so that simple people would understand them better.
- C) to make fun of pseudo-intellectuals for their snobbery.
- D) when they want to impress somebody.

20. In context 'Curzon Street society' most probably stands for

- A) people of refined manners.
- B) vulgar and irritating men.
- C) inquisitorial homo sapiens.
- D) experts in linguistics.

Directions: Read “The Nail” by Brothers Grimm below. Then read the questions that follow it and choose the best answer to each question among A, B or C, marking your answers on your answer sheet.

A merchant had done good business at the fair. He had sold his wares, and filled his money-bags with gold and silver. Then he wanted to travel homewards, and be in his own house before nightfall. So he packed his trunk with the money-bags inside on his horse, and rode away.

At noon he rested in a town, and when he wanted to go farther, the stable-boy brought out his horse and said, “A nail is missing, Sir, from the horseshoe on its left hind foot.” “Let it be missing,” answered the merchant. “The shoe will certainly stay on for the six miles I have still to go. I am in a hurry.”

In the afternoon, when he once more stopped and had his horse fed, the stable-boy went into the room to him and said, “A nail is missing, Sir, from the horseshoe on its left hind foot. Shall I take him to the blacksmith?”

“Let it be missing,” answered the man. “The horse can very well hold out for the couple of miles which remain. I am in haste.”

He rode forth, but before long the horse began to limp. It had not limped long before it began to stumble, and it had not stumbled long before it fell down and broke its leg. The merchant was forced to leave the horse where it was, unbuckle the trunk, take it on his back, and go home on foot.

He did not arrive there until quite late at night. “That cursed nail,” he said to himself “has caused all this disaster.”

Wise men say: “The more haste, the less speed.”

21. The merchant had made good profit at the fair.

- A) True.                      B) False.                      C) No information in the text.

22. At the fair the merchant had sold silverware.

23. A stable-boy found out that the merchant’s horse needed a nail in one of its shoes.

- A) True.                      B) False.                      C) No information in the text.

24. Only a mile away from the merchant’s house, the horse broke its leg.

- A) True.                      B) False.                      C) No information in the text.

25. The merchant blamed himself for his late arrival home.

- A) True.                      B) False.                      C) No information in the text.

Directions: Read the text below. Then read the questions that follow it and choose the best answer to each question among A, B or C, marking your answers on your answer sheet.

Hainan gibbon ‘clinging on’ with 25 left in China

Scientists are racing to save a critically endangered ape species that lives only in the rainforests of southern China’s Hainan Island. With 25 known individuals remaining, a disease outbreak or a strong typhoon could “massively impact” the species’s chances of survival, the scientists say.

Samuel Turvey, a senior research fellow at the Zoological Society of London, said the Hainan gibbon was “definitely the world’s rarest ape species, the rarest primate species, and one of the rarest mammal species. They’re kind of clinging on, literally and metaphorically, to patches of forest in the mountains which people haven’t got around to cutting down yet.”

He said both the species and its habitat were protected under Chinese law, but “the population is so low now that simply removing the threat isn’t enough ...”

Hainan is China’s smallest and southernmost province, an island of rainforests, mountains and sandy beaches in the South China Sea. The gibbons – unusually tall and thin creatures with small black faces and thick beige fur – live in the Bawangling national nature reserve. The reserve was home to more than 2,000 gibbons in the late 1950s, but poachers and woodcutters slowly intruded on the area, leaving only about 30 individuals by 1980, when the Chinese government declared the park a protected area.

Greenpeace China’s forest campaigner Wu Hao said the island – one of China’s most biodiverse regions – lost 72,000 hectares of rainforest between 2000 and 2010, mostly to make way for rubber and paper plantations. “The plantations are still there, which is actually still a big problem for the nature reserve, for the gibbon and for other species,” he said.

Experts are also searching for individual gibbons that might inhabit remote patches of forest, where none have been previously observed. “Every one of those gibbons is worth its weight in gold for conservation,” he said. “The more gibbons there are left, the greater the chances that we can recover this population.”

26. According to scientists, an epidemic can decrease the Hainan gibbon’s chances of survival.

- A) True.                      B) False.                      C) No information in the text.

27. Chinese law protects both the Hainan gibbon and the area where it lives.

- A) True.                      B) False.                      C) No information in the text.

28. Hainan is the smallest island in China.

- A) True.                      B) False.                      C) No information in the text.

29. About 1,000 Hainan gibbons have been killed by poachers since the 1950s.

- A) True.                      B) False.                      C) No information in the text.

30. In Wu Hao’s opinion, the gibbons are the only species to suffer from the loss of their habitat.

- A) True.                      B) False.                      C) No information in the text.

PART THREE: USE OF ENGLISH

Many of these biggest internet personalities themselves confess that they find it difficult to understand the (36) ..... they receive but they do not mind having hordes of exalted fans wherever they go.

So what makes these people so special? In part, the success of the YouTube phenomenon from its very beginning has (37) ..... in the reality television culture which has made invading people’s lives through the medium of the camera socially acceptable. Vloggers (38) ..... advantage of the ridiculous fact that many people easily get addicted to watching someone else live their life (39) ..... of living their own.

YouTube personalities have turned into an integral part of modern culture which thrives on invasions of privacy, and which idolises the trivial and the mediocre. The only question which remains is how long the spectacle will last.

Hi, everybody! I'm from the town of Salem, Oregon, and I live near Bush's Pasture Park.

I've just had a most curious adventure in the park and I'd like to know if anyone else from around here or a similar place has had such an experience. My Mom even wouldn't believe me at first – she thought I had lost my hat as I often lose stuff like scarves, gloves, keys and the like.

Anyway, it was really weird. It was Sunday and as I was running along in the park, I felt it out of nowhere – a scratch on the back of my neck and my hat was pulled right off my head. I turned around because I wanted to know what had just hit me on the head – what was coming for me. Nothing was there. It was completely gone!

Then I met Jodie, she's a regular on that jogging path and we are friends, kind of. She said it was an aggressive bird, some kind of owl, and I was not the first victim. And none of the hats had turned up. She also said that there were warning signs, which were put up around the park a couple of days ago but I haven't seen them and I'm not the only one, I guess. Jodie said they warned joggers to be careful during the nesting season – from January till March, that is. What does the nesting season have to do with people's hats, I wonder. Mom thinks the bird might need soft things to line its nest with...

Can anyone tell me more about owls? Are they supposed to be aggressive to people and could they attack and really hurt somebody – a child, for instance?

Dad suggested that I wear my motorbike helmet next time I go jogging in the park...

A little old lady walked into the main branch of Chase Manhattan Bank and wished to open an account. But first, she wanted to meet the President of the bank due to the large amount of money involved. The clerk looked into her bag and saw bundles of $100-dollar bills which could have amounted to millions of dollars. So she called the President and soon the lady was escorted to his office. After the introductions, the President asked how she had come into so much money.

“I bet,” she said.

“You bet!” repeated the President. “Do you bet on horses?”

“No,” she replied, “I bet on people.”

Then all of a sudden, she said:

“I’ll bet you $25,000 that by 10 a.m. tomorrow your nose will have fallen off.” The Bank President didn’t see how he could lose, so he accepted. For the rest of the day he was very careful. When he got up in the morning, he looked into the mirror, first thing. There was nothing wrong with his nose. He went to work and waited for the little old lady.

At 10 sharp, she was escorted into his office, accompanied by a man. She explained that he was her lawyer.

“Well,” she asked, “what about our bet?”

“As you can see,” the President replied, “I’m the same as I have always been, only $25,000 richer!” The lady seemed to accept this, but requested to check if his nose was not fake. The President thought that was reasonable, so she caught him by the nose, led him to the window, pulled and pinched – the nose was obviously real and she paid him. Meanwhile, her lawyer had started banging his head against the wall.

“What’s wrong with him?” the President asked.

“Oh, him,” she replied, “I bet him $500,000 that by 10 this morning I would be leading the President of Chase Manhattan Bank by the nose.”

Many years ago, in a small Indian village, a farmer and his daughter worked hard for their living. After a couple of dry years, the farmer ended up owing a large sum of money to the local moneylender. That moneylender, who was old and ugly, fancied the farmer's daughter and he proposed a deal: he would forget about the farmer's debt if he could marry her.

The farmer refused, so the moneylender suggested that they play a little game. He would place a black stone and a white stone in an empty moneybag. Then the girl would have to pick one stone from the bag. If she picked the black stone, she would become his wife and her father's debt would be forgiven. If she picked the white one, she wouldn't need to marry him and her father's debt would still be forgiven. If she refused to pick a stone, her father would be thrown into prison.

The three of them, the farmer, his daughter and the moneylender, were standing on a path covered with small round stones in the farmer's field and as they talked, the moneylender bent over to pick two stones. The sharp-eyed girl noticed that he had picked two black stones and put them into the bag. But she was very clever. When she took out a stone out of the moneybag, she staggered and immediately let it fall onto the stone-covered path without showing it to anyone. "Oh, how clumsy of me!" she exclaimed. "But never mind, if we look into the bag, we will be able to tell which stone I picked."

The moneylender did not dare to admit his dishonesty, so he had to forgive the farmer's debt without marrying his daughter.
